Summary

Spencer Wiseman began his time in construction once he turned 16 years old. Working as a laborer and all together managing labor crews, he gained an appreciation for the people and hard work that make up a successful construction project. Once he graduated high school he chose to follow his father's footsteps, and is currently a senior in the Rinker School of Construction Management at the University of Florida. Numerous internships since his time as a laborer has allowed him to gain a plentiful amount of experience with a wide variety of projects that span from Sarasota into his campus at the University of Florida. His wealth of experience combined with his eagerness to continue improving in this field make him a useful member of any project team.
